The Angels

of

Symbolism

Also known as

The Angels of

Morilon

Beloved,

We are the heavenly host of interpretation and symbols.

Those who interpret dreams do so with our inspiration.

Any symbol becomes understandable with our help.

We inspire appropriate symbols for every outside form, archetype, and for every virtue and quality in the realms of mind and emotions.

The wisdom that we inspire, through the divine virtues of our name, allows any son or daughter of Divine Being to correctly judge the true nature of any being, or symbol, on any world or level, by its form.

Learning about the symbols of the analogies, through the virtues of Morilon, it is possible to understand any being appearing...in any sphere.

This, most importantly, also is why, in this time of the Alpha and the Omega, the Age of Flowers, that the sons and daughters of Divine Being wear beautiful personally meaningful and expressive sacred clothing and adornments,
and why the hairy coverings of their body temples are allowed to grow naturally.
and be worn in symbolic and sacred ways.

Here is one of our stories:

THE CHOICE

Once upon a time an executive named Jed had to make a very important decision that would determine the fate of his computer company.

He had to choose a new manager for the technical operations division.

He knew that the job responsibilities of this new person were so important to the survival of the company that who he chose would make or break its future success.

He thought of the many fine intelligent people who had been drawn to work for this company, working together with good will and high visions to serve others.

The company was working on cutting edge sophisticated computer technology.

So far, all of the companys success had resulted from sustained enthusiasm, high levels of genius, good feelings and loyalty among the employees.

The job required someone who would encourage and sustain these high spiritual ideals and esprit de corps.

It had to be someone with good people skills and brilliant, inspired technical expertise.

The most pressing problem was that he had to make a choice quickly.

Time was of the essence.

He knew that each of the three candidates that had been chosen by his personnel managers would try to impress him.

How could he see through their manipulations and make the right decision?

He called on the Angels of /Morilon/ for help.

A sense of deep peace descended upon him.

Flowing divine feelings opened his heart.

His eyes softened.

A sense of the grandeur of Divine Being brought him comfort.

He knew he could trust his inner guidance.

He relaxed back into his chair and looked up with a sense of joy when the first candidate, Joe, came into his office for his interview.

Jed saw right away that Joe was unusual.

First of all, there was a shimmering light around him.

Even though he obviously had no sense of fashion, there was something about the way he moved and carried his shoulders that looked finer than any expensive suit could ever look.

He was relaxed and self contained.

He was beyond fashion.

He had no need for it.

Like many geniuses, Joe seemed to have what the psychological gurus call attention deficit disorder.

He would look sharply at Jed with a laser intensity in response to certain important comments and questions, but then would fidget and seem bored as Jed drifted into seemingly casual talk.

His coffee stained resume was so technical in places that even Jed had trouble understanding parts of it.

This guy was obviously really out there.

What was really fascinating about this candidate was that when Joe answered a question,

his answer went straight into Jeds soul and left him amazed and impressed.

It was as if Joe saw a much larger picture than the mere science of the situation.

At times Jed felt as if he were in the presence of a spiritual master.

There was something uncannily incisive about Joe.

Joe had a fine high forehead.

His hands were large with fine tapered fingers.

His nose looked like a Greek patrician and his skin glowed.

He wore a large ruby on the ring finger of his left hand with a mysterious symbol carved on it.

Jeb felt that the inscription had a profound meaning.

When he asked Joe about it, he said it had belonged to his favorite grandfather, a mysterious kind hermit who lived in a small beautiful old house way out in a natural forest.

With mysterious twinkles and smiles, he would encourage Joe to read the fascinating books about mystical philosophy that were laying around the library.

A strange aura of peacefulness descended on Joe when he was alone reading those books.

He explained to Jed that it seemed at these times that his head opened up, and a beautiful loving light flowed right into his brain!

His heart would lift up and he felt an ecstasy that would cause cold shivers all over his skin.

Jed could relate to this very deeply, as he too had had similar experiences, and had spent many hours reading ancient spiritual books on divine enlightenment.

As Joe continued to share these memories, the Angels of Morilon inspired Jed to see that the symbol represented the four levels of divine energy that operate through enlightened mankind :
conscious omnipotent divine will and faith for the highest good of all, divine mind contemplating the original purity of all ideas, divine feelings of cosmic love, of all divine virtues, and happiness, and finally divine sensations, memory and logic.

As he went within to listen to inner guidance, they showed him that many of the holy mystical symbols on earth represent this 'quadrupolar magnet' in various ways.

He realized that these four represent the four brainwave patterns of Delta, Theta, Alpha and Beta that develop from infancy through adulthood.

They correspond to pure being that is one with Divine Being and all creation, pure deep inner thought, pure holy feelings and pure sensations.

In a poignant flash, he remembered his own purest states of infancy and childhood, the time of dominant Delta and Theta brainwaves, and understood what it meant in the Bible when it said, "Ye must be as little children to enter the Kingdom of Heaven, which is within."

It seemed as though the company of Heaven hovered around Joe, and Jeb was sad to see him leave when the interview was over.

He realized that this man would be very advanced in his grasp of the subtleties of day to day operations of the company in addition to being an asset to the technical development of products.

Joe had felt like a long lost old friend.

The next candidate came in with an outfit that would make a movie star envious.

Merles moves were smooth and his answers were verbally polished and politically correct.

He watched Jed like a hawk, but treated him casually like an old friend.

His resume was textbook perfect, designed to impress.

As Jeb questioned him, in his logical mind he became more and more impressed.

If Merle could be believed, he was obviously the perfect person for the job.

They would really be lucky to have him.

Everything about him on the surface, though, seemed almost too good to be true.

For some reason Jeb felt warily uneasy, as if he should watch his back.

As this dangerous feeling got stronger, Jeb realized that even though at first glance he had thought Merles appearance seemed immaculate, there was an unnatural appearance to his expensive suit that made it seem uncomfortable, and too pretentious.

Merle also exhibited a very tight tenseness around his eyes, and there was a cruel tilt to his mouth at times.

His sense of humor was a bit too cutting.

In spite of his casual manner, Jeb saw Merles fingers clutch the arm of the chair so hard they turned white.

Jeb felt himself getting dizzy in his presence.

A wave of nausea swept over him.

When this man left the office, it took Jeb several minutes to recover his deep center.

As he came to himself, the final candidate was ushered in for her interview.

She was a quiet lady in her thirties, wearing a conservative pale green suit and a lovely necklace of lacy blue agate.

Her long hair was tastefully held by a pearl comb.

There was something royal and grand about her, but also a sense of weariness and suffering.

She seemed out of place, as if she were only there by necessity.

The angels of Morilon made Jed aware that the blue lace agate signified Janets purity and high spirituality.

The pearls represented her feminine energy of emotional nurturance, something the company sorely needed.

The pale green suit represented her atunement with the natural divine order of things and grace.

She had an impressive resume, having worked with some of the finest minds in the business.

It turned out that Janet was more than qualified scientifically.

Interpersonally, Jed felt humbled in her presence, as if he were in the presence of true royalty.

There was something rare and precious about her.

He found out that she had indeed faced a recent change of circumstances that had caused her great sadness and hardship.

As he spoke with her, time seemed suspended, and he felt as if he were transported into a more refined, exquisite world of sensitivity and grace.

When she finally left he had the rest of the afternoon to ponder.

In deep meditation, his first impressions were confirmed.

The first guy was a gentle genius.

If he were put in charge, every technical problem would be solved brilliantly, but he was a loner and would have a hard time socializing with other people.

In Jeps opinion, the second guy could be a sociopath.

Unfortunately, if this were true, he probably was in it only for what he could get out of it, or worse, he might even be a corporate spy.

If he were put in charge, the department would become a political war zone and the business would be the final casualty.

Janet, on the other hand, was a highly intelligent, spiritually advanced being of high ideals, impeccable ethics and deep insight into people and trends.

She saw the big picture; if he put her in charge, there was no limit to where the company would go.

He looked at the budget.

He made a decision.

He hired Joe and Janet both.

Janet became manager, and Joe, chief of research.

Janet and Joe became good friends.

The company warmed up under their influence. Janet uplifted everyone spiritually.

Under her influence ethical decisions were made that put the company on the forefront of responsible global innovation.

She quickly made healthful changes to the workplace.

Plants and gurgling water fountains were artfully installed, beautiful background music played continuously, blocking out all the erratic noises from machines.

The crowning glory was lovely, comfortable sitting places that created a much more relaxed atmosphere.

Soft handmade natural fiber area rugs felt wonderful underfoot.

Beautiful well lit paintings of majestic landscapes met the eye around every turn.

The woman was a genius.

With so much harmony all around, the people accessed much deeper theta brainwaves, and pretty soon everyone was much more innovative and productive.

Long hours at work no longer seemed so long.

People felt good being there.

They were given more flexibility to telecommute and freedom to manage their time and the way they worked.

It was a brilliant change.

Spirits brightened and people were happier.

They threw themselves into their work with gratitude for the higher quality of life.

Joe, meanwhile, had an uncanny ability to seemingly pull new inventions out of thin air.

Other technicians became apprentices under him.

By his example they became more balanced between logical left brain and intuitive right brain thinking.

The atmosphere in the workplace warmed up with good energy beyond anything anyone had felt before.

They all became much closer as family.

There were sounds of frequent laughter.

Everyone felt sincere goodwill.

The business flourished.

Powerful new products were designed with ingenious safeguards and incentives so that they would only be used in ways that were safe to everyone and to the environment.

The equipment was very beautiful, attractive and designed to be inexpensively and easily upgraded over the years instead of replaced, so that tons and tons of dangerous substances were kept out of landfills.

Since the public had been concerned about pollution, waste, and landfills for years, they gravitated with great excitement and loyalty to these computers.

Joes software was so brilliant, was so easily and inexpensively upgraded, and performed so exceptionally well that, added to everything else, the companys profits and reputation soared off the charts.

The company was seen as heroic and became a celebrity.

The PR firm that represented them received supernatural help from the heavenly hosts in designing packaging, promotions, and advertising.

The success of this company shocked the industry into paying attention and soon other companies began to offer environmentally safer products.***

With the help of the divine virtues of the angels of Morilon, Jeb had successfully read the many subtle signs and symbols presented to him during the interviews.

Even though Jeb had gone into this situation thinking he was hiring only one person, he made the right decision and hired both Joe and Janet.

The company was becoming the market leader and a trendsetter as helpful new paradigms and standards for the new millennium were shared with the world.
